LESSON NO. 5.

POEM: Scratching the Tiger's Back.

Word meanings on page no. 31.

Comprehension

- [A] Complete the sentences in your own words.
1. ferocious animal.
  2. there are times when a tiger wants to relax or have someone to scratch his back and not just being a deadly predator.
  3. the tiger feels lazy.
  4. black is for 'evil' and gold for 'good'.
  5. good and evil dwells in him similarly as humans.

[B] Answer these questions.

- Ans 1. When the tiger is not worried about the meals, he feels lazy and doesn't like to move.
 2. The poet meant that when the tiger feels lazy, he doesn't do anything and so time goes by slowly.

"All the work you do, is done for your own salvation, is done for your own benefit." —Swami Vivekananda

Chitra

3. When the tiger feels lazy, he lies down and doesn't like to do anything. His lack of energy makes him look mellow. The furs that glows and stripes that look like daggers when he is looking for his meals, don't seem that scary when he is resting.

[C] Think and Answer.

1. The tiger seems to be begging for affection. His repeated request for someone to scratch his back shows that he does not like to be feared and wants someone to treat him with kindness and affection. He should not be merely considered as a fierce animal which likes to hunt all the times.
2. The poet is trying to say that all beings behave similarly. The tiger seems to be begging, for all to understand that like human beings both good and evil dwell in him. Both animals and human beings need love, care and affection. The tiger needs as much of our care as cats and dogs.

[D] Complete young Saro's Conversation with a tiger. Fill in the blanks with correct words from the brackets to form more phrases with the word stay.

Ans 1. → in 2. → over 3. → away

4. → out 5. → up 6. → put 7. → at

6. carry on
7. gone up

- [F.] 1. tiger → C
2. electricity → U

3. gold → U

5. Cartons → C

4. Poems → C

6. Competition → C/U

SUMMARY

The poem "Scratching the tiger's back" has been composed by Keki N Daruwala. In this poem, the poet conveys that it is rather sad or unfortunate that the tiger is known only as a ferocious animal that attacks and kills. However there are times when a tiger wants to laze around and have someone to scratch his back. His mood often depends upon whether he has eaten his meal or not. When he is hungry, he is active and has the energy to go out in the forest and hunt for his prey. But there are times when he has already eaten. His stomach is full and is not eager to attack. The dullness of his skin and stripes conveys his reluctance to do anything except relax.

In autumn evening, there is a moment when the rays of the setting sun fall on the leaves and these reflect the golden colour of the sunlight. This makes the tiger look brighter and they look golden. But they also cast a shadow which is black. When seen in this black and golden shadow, the tiger does not look frightening.

Just as everyone has both bad and good qualities. The tiger is also a combination of both good and evil, depicted by his gold and black stripes. He announces that we can scratch his back in order to make him feel good.

"All the work you do, is done for your own salvation, is done for your own benefit." —Swami Vivekananda

LESSON NO. :- I      Poem: To a Butterfly.
Word meanings on Page 42.

SUMMARY

The poem "To a butterfly" has all the traditional features of wordsworth's poetry. wordsworth, while addressing a beautiful butterfly he spotted in his garden, marvels upon how the little creature has managed to hook the poet's attention for a full half hour. The poet admires the grace with which the butterfly rested upon a yellow flower in his first stanza. He was attracted to the stillness of the butterfly, which made the insect appear more motionless to the poet than the frozen seas where no activity can be detected. The unbroken stillness and calm of the butterfly made the poet wonder if it ever moved to even eat or sleep. Then the poet imagines the joys the little creature must feel everytime the breeze found its delicate wings among the trees, calling out to the butterfly to take flight again and grace other corners of the world with its beautiful presence.

In the second stanza, the poet assures the butterfly that it can come take rest in his family orchard whenever it wanted. He invites the butterfly to sit near him and his sister on the bough and parake in their pleasant conversation about sunshine and songs. He wants the butterfly to be part of the nostalgia-filled conversations Tim and his sister have about the sweet summer days from their childhood that were so carefree and pleasant that they seemed to last as long as twenty days.
